The Junkluggers

My family and I moved to Miami 21 years ago. Born and raised in Venezuela, we decided to leave our native country when I was pregnant with my twin boys, as the political situation worsened and the freedoms and rights we all deserve were no longer guaranteed. My husband Simon and I decided to bring up our children in a safe place.

After relocating we went into the retail business that we sold after 15 years. Looking for an opportunity to give back while providing a service to the community through our business we came across The Junkluggers. As a professional junk and furniture removal company, we offer efficient, reliable, eco-friendly solutions for all your removal needs, donating and recycling the items we take from homes and businesses to avoid landfill and give back to the community. No job is too big or too small for our fully trained and experienced team who deal compassionately with seniors needing to dispose of their personal belongings when downsizing or moving into an assisted living facility, or their families when their loved ones have passed away. We also specialize in hoarding situations that are handled with great sensitivity.

As the Business Development Manager, I identify and pursue business opportunities. I work with many realtors, organizers and property managers and will ensure all our customers are well cared for. I enjoy meeting people, and in my free time, I love exercising, traveling, and volunteering in my community, especially at the Humane Society.
